STORM STRIKES IN OKLAHOMA

Youth Admits He Shot His Mother

Claims Accidental Discharge of Gun In Crossing Room

Entire Load From Shot Gun Strikes Woman in Her Back

MONEY IS MISSING $3,000 Kept in Iron Boxes Gone—Boxes Found in Yard Empty

HARRISON, Mich.—(AP)—Albert Gruno, 21, was arrested early Wednesday, and admitted that he fired the shot that killed his mother Mrs. Pauline Gruno, 65 years old, last Thursday.

Young Gruno has maintained, since his arrest last Friday, that the shooting was accidental.

Officers however are investigating a theory of robbery in connection with the shooting. Mrs. Gruno was believed to have had approximately $3,000 in the house at the time of her death.

Two iron money boxes, in which she kept her money, because she distrusted banks, were found near the house, broken open and empty.

Gruno, in his statement to the officers, said that he had visited his mother last Thursday. She had asked him to go out and kill a rabbit for her. As he started across the living-room with the gun in his hand he tripped and fell, at the same time the gun was discharged, the entire load striking his mother in the back.

Hot Springs Youth Injured in Texas

Falls From Between Two Cars on Passenger Train

SAN MARCOS, Texas.—(AP)—A 17-year-old youth, perhaps fatally injured when he fell from a train near New Braunfels Tuesday, was identified Wednesday at Woodrow Wilson Lancaster of Hot Springs, officers here reported.

A search of the youth's clothing revealed a card reading, "In case of accident, notify Jesse Lancaster, Hot Springs, Ark." Jesse Lancaster is his brother.

The accident was reported by Alfonso Turine, 20, Lancaster's traveling companion, who said they were riding between two cars of the passenger train when Lancaster fell.

Captain George Fried, Wednesday diverted the homeward bound steamship America to go to the aid of the reported sinking Swedish ship, the Ovidia. This steamer is reported sinking 100 miles from Cape Race. 550 of her passengers were brought safely to shore by the small boat Panjus, a fishing craft.

MADRID.—(AP)—Fears of a revolution caused authorities to order troops sent here late Wednesday, to investigate the affair. A general strike has extended to Seville and Manresa, textile centers.

BENTONVILLE.—(AP)—The state game and fish commission notified Benton county sportsmen, recently that nearly 1,000,000 young bass will be placed in streams in the county within the next few weeks.

Will Rebuild Gin Destroyed By Fire

Farmers Gin Co. Will Have New Gin By 1931 Season Announced

Mr. A. J. Kent of Patmos, route two recently announced that the Farmers Gin Company, who built and operated a cotton gin near the crossing of the Lewisville Highway and the Duley's Ferry road for the past two years until the gin mysteriously burned on the night of September 22, would rebuild and be ready for the 1931 ginning season.

In making the announcement to a representative of the Star, Mr. Kent said, that the company had enjoyed a splendid patronage from the farmers of the community in which the gin was located and if the fire had not been so late in the season the gin would have been rebuilt at that time.

By another ginning season, "We will have another gin at the same location built along the modern lines of our former gin," Mr. Kent said.

The officers of the company are Glendon Martin, manager; E. J. Drake, secretary-treasurer and A. J. Kent, president.

This announcement will come as good news to the people of the south part of the county as this gin serves a large territory and will be conveniently located.

Transport Plane Reported Missing

Air Passenger Ship Is Believed Stranded in the Mountains

BAKERSFIELD, Cal.—(AP)—Twenty airplanes swept in widening circles late Tuesday above the rugged Tehachapi mountains, hunting a missing Pacific air transport plane and its three occupants.

The mail and passenger plane, bound from San Diego to Oakland, made its last radio report while fighting fog and fierce winds above the 8,000-foot peaks soon after midnight.

Miss D. Markow of San Diego rode the night mail plane with pilot P. A. Donaldson and his mechanic, George Rogers. She had bought a ticket at San Diego for Portland, Ore.

A parachute flare, indicating that Donaldson had sought an emergency landing place in the thick of a murky, stormy night, was the only clue to the fate of the fliers. It was seen through binoculars by a searching pilot far below the side of Liebre mountain. Donaldson had but two flares.

Spain Breaks Up Communist Plot

60 Agitators Arrested For Attempting to Overthrow Government

MADRID.—(AP)—The government Tuesday discovered a plot which it says was designed by Communist agitators to overthrow the monarchy. Sixty alleged leaders were arrested.

Officials charged that the movement had as its objective the establishment of a republic, with Communists working with certain republican elements.

After discovery of the plot, heavily armed forces of police and civil guards were placed on the principal streets, around public buildings and in all strategic centers.

The government telegraphed provincial governors and ordered them to round up strike agitators, promising that those arrested would be punished severely.

It was the timber and building materials used in the reconstruction work which the auctioneers offered for sale.

Most of the 56 Institutions Will Return to Normal Schedule

LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—The banking situation here was relieved Wednesday with the assurance to the bank clearing houses that most of the 56 banks in the state closed Monday and Tuesday would reopen within the five-day period, after reorganization.

Only one additional closing was reported to the state department Wednesday. The Bank of Stamps at Stamps, an independent institution, suspended for a five-day period.

A statement made by the clearing house Wednesday said that the "combined banks stand ready to support every member of the association to the fullest extent, and pledge our combined facilities and resources that any depositor will be paid in full on demand." This statement was signed by the Little Rock and North Little Rock banks.

Officials of the American Banking, as well as each of the closed banks, over the state continued to work on plans for reopening after the five-day suspension period.

Seventeen Dead, Thirty Hurt; Many Homes Demolished

Heavy Rains Follow Wind Hindering Work of Rescue Parties

COMMUNICATION CUT

All Telephone Lines in the Stricken Area Are Blown Down

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla.—(AP)—First reports received here Wednesday, said that Bethany, Okla. had been struck by a wind storm leaving at least 17 dead and approximately 30 injured.

Efforts were made to confirm this report but telephone lines in the stricken area were found to be down.

Reporters and rescue workers were immediately dispatched to the stricken area.

The report further stated that hundreds of homes and other buildings were destroyed by the wind.

The Bethany community is populated by members of the Nazareth church. Bethany Penal College is located there. The town is seven miles west of here, in a thickly settled area.

Emergency quarters have been established at radio broadcasting station WKY near the outskirts of the city.

At 11:25 Wednesday three of the dead were brought to the General Hospital here. Twenty of the injured were reported received at another of the city hospitals.

John Hutchinson, who brought several of the injured to the hospital, said at least one hundred buildings had been demolished in and near Bethany.

A steady downpour of rain fell as the rescue workers in squads went about their duties.

It is feared the rate of death and injury will be increased as the rescue work continues.

Before reaching Bethany, the storm struck a school house at Campbell Creek, killing Marguerite Zurling, 14, Dolbert Stark, 12 and one pupil who was unidentified.

Miss Mary Proctor, teacher in the school and several others were seriously injured. Farmers in the vicinity of the school pulled the dead and injured from the wreckage.

Jack Zurling, brother of one of the girls killed brought all the victims to an Oklahoma City hospital.

Adjutant General Charles Barrott, ordered three companies of National guardsmen with a combined strength of one hundred and seventy-five men into the storm area.

Charles Eaton, an aviator after flying over the territory said as far as he could see the storm was confined mostly to the area of Bethany.

CHAPTER I
BONNIE DUNDEE stretched out a long and rather fine pair of legs, regarding the pattern of his dark-blue socks with distinct satisfaction; then he rested his black head with a sigh of satisfaction against the rich upholstery of an armchair not at all intended for his use.

His cheerful blue eyes turned at last—but not too long a last—to the small, upright figure seated at a typewriter desk in the corner of the office.

"Good morning, Penny," he called out lazily, and waited good-humoredly for the storm to break.

"Miss Crain—to you!" The flying fingers did not stop an instant, but Dundee noticed with glee that the slim back stiffened even more rigidly and that there was a decided toss of the brown head.

"But Penny is so much more like you," Dundee protested, unruffled. "And why should I be forced always to think of you as a long-legged bird, when even our mutual boss, District Attorney Williams S. Sanderson, has the privilege of calling you what you are—a bright and shining new penny."

"I've known Bill Sanderson since I was born," the unseen lips informed him truculently, even as the unseen fingers continued their fiercely staccato typing.

"Ah! That explains a lot!" Dundee conceded handsomely. "I just wondered, amidst all this bonhomie of 'Bill' and 'Penny,' why I—"

"I only call Mr. Sanderson 'Bill' when I forget!" the small creature defended herself sharply. "Goodness knows I try to be an efficient private secretary! And I could be a lot more efficient if lazy strangers didn't plump themselves down in our best visitors' chair, and try to flirt with me. I don't flirt! Do you hear?—I don't flirt with anybody!"

"Flirt with you, you funny little Penny?" Dundee's voice was a little sad, the voice of a man who finds himself grievously misunderstood. "I only want you to like me, if you can, and be a little nice to me, for after all I—"

"Oh, I know!" Penny Crain jerked the finished letter from her typewriter and spun about on her chair to face him. "I know you are 'Mr. James F. Dundee, special investigator attached to the office of the district attorney,' and that you have a right to drive me crazy if you want to."

"Crazy?" Dundee was genuinely amazed, contrite. "I beg your pardon most humbly, Miss Crain. I'll go back to my cell—"

"Your office is almost as big and nice as this one," Penny retorted, but her sharp, bright brown eyes—really almost the color of a new penny—softened until they took on a velvety depth.

DUNDEE did not fail to notice the softening, nor did the little heart-shaped face, with its low widow's-peak, its straight, short nose, and its pointed little chin, fail to please him any more acutely than on the other days of the one short week he had been privileged at intervals to gaze upon it.

"But the files are in this office and—other things," he told her, his blue eyes twinkling happily once more.

"Don't you dare touch my files again!" Penny cried, springing to her feet and almost running toward the wall which was completely concealed by drawers, cabinets and shelves, filled with the records of which she was the proud custodian.

"That's why I said just now that you were driving me crazy. Thursday you took a whole folder of correspondence out of the letter files and put it back under the wrong initial. I had to hunt for it for two hours, with Bill—I mean, Mr. Sanderson—gnawing his nails with impatience. He thought I had filed it wrong, and you might have made me lose my job."

Unconsciously her slightly husky contralto voice had sunk lower and trembled audibly.

"I'm awfully sorry. I shan't touch your files again, Miss Crain."

"Oh—go on and call me Penny," she conceded impatiently.

"What do you want now? . . . And you can get anything you need out of the files if you'll just put the folder in the bottom drawer of my desk, so that I can file it myself—correctly!"

"Thank you, Penny," Bonnie Dundee said gravely. "I'd like awfully to have the complete transcript of 'The State versus Maginty.' Mr. Sanderson is determined to get a conviction where our former district attorney most ingloriously failed. The new trial comes up in two weeks, and he wants me to try to uncover a missing link of evidence."

"I know," she nodded, and stretched her short, slender body to pull down the two heavy volumes he required.

Without a by-your-leave, Special Investigator Dundee resumed his comfortable seat, and laid the first of the volumes open upon his knees. But he did not seem to take a great deal of interest in the impaneling of jurors in the case of one Rufus Maginty, who had won the temporary triumph of a "hung jury" under the handling of the state's case by the deposed district attorney, Sherwood.

RATHER, his eyes followed the small, brisk figure of Miss Penelope Crain as it moved about the room, and his ears listened to the tapping of her French heels. . . . French heels! Hadn't she been wearing sensible Cuban-heeled oxfords all other days of this first week of his "attachment" to the district attorney's office? . . . Cunning little things, for all her thorniness and her sharpness with him, which he now saw that he had deserved. . . . Pretty, too. . . . Darned pretty! . . . What color was that dress of hers? . . . Chartreuse, didn't they call it? Chartreuse with big brown dots in it. Bet it was sleeveless under that short little jacket of golden-brown chiffon velvet. . . . By Jove—and Dundee lapsed into one of the Englishisms he had picked up during his six months' work in England as a tyro in the records department of Scotland Yard, before he had come to Hamilton to make a humble beginning as a cub detective on the homicide squad—yes, by Jove, she was all dressed up, for some reason or other.

"Of course! Because it's Saturday and you have the afternoon off!" Dundee finished his reverie aloud, to the astonishment of the small person trying to reach a file drawer just a little too high for her. "I mean," he hastened to explain, "that I've just noticed how beautiful your costume is, and found a reason for it."

There was sudden color in the creamy face, made the more interesting—to Dundee, at least—by a sprinkling of golden-brown freckles across her nose. The French heels tapped an angry progress across the big office, and Penny sat down abruptly in her swivel chair, reached across the immaculate desk, snatched up a morning paper and tossed it, without a glance, in her tormentor's general direction.

"Page three, column two, first item," she informed him ungraciously, and then began to search with a funny sort of desperation for more work to occupy her insatiable fingers and her extraordinary energy.

Bonnie Dundee grinned indulgently as he opened The Hamilton Morning News and turned to the specified page and column.

"Ah, my old friend, the 'society editress,' in her very best style," he commented, as he began to read aloud:

"Mrs. Juanita Selim, new member, is entertaining the Forsythe Alumni Bridge Club this afternoon, luncheon to be

Air Mail Over the Sea

APPROXIMATELY three and one-half years after Lindbergh startled the imagination of the world by flying from New York to Paris his achievement bears the long-expected fruit, and it is announced from Washington that plans for an Anglo-American air mail line across the Atlantic have been agreed upon.

Lindbergh from the start insisted that his chief endeavor had been to boost the cause of commercial aviation. As the years passed, however, and regular commercial service across the ocean seemed as far off as ever, it began to look as if his flight had been little more than a gorgeous, breathtaking stunt.

Now Lindbergh is vindicated. There is no doubt that his hop to Paris hastened the coming of this trans-Atlantic air mail line by many years. It was he who set the world thinking about it; he who made men believe that it really could be done.

But it is noteworthy that the perilous "great circle" route he followed will not be the path for this air mail line; nor will land planes, like the Spirit of St. Louis, be used. Instead the operators of the line plan to divide the trip into three stages; from the United States to Bermuda, from Bermuda to the Azores, and from the Azores to London. And they will use seaplanes which will be able to land on the water, if necessary, and which consequently will make the pilot's job much less hazardous.

There is something in this announcement that is extremely gratifying. Not only does it provide a new laurel for Lindbergh's crown—which, in itself, is a matter for rejoicing by all of the young man's admirers; it wipes out one more great barrier to time and space, and takes another tuck in the world's belt life.

Speedy communication is one of the distinguishing features of this age. News travels from place to place with lightning quickness. It has to. Our whole civilization is built on that speed. To return even for a month, to the communications of our grandfathers would wreck our whole social and economic structure.

The airplane, as a result, has been invaluable as a mail carrier. Now it is to be put into service on a stretch where speed is extremely important—the Atlantic ocean. The world will wait with a good deal of eagerness to see actual operations begun.

The Valet of Tradition

IT IS extremely gratifying to learn that a rich English baronet, dying, has left a fortune of $100,000 to his valet.
Gratifying, that is, because it so beautifully carries out one of our favorite English traditions.

According to tradition, the English valet is perfect. He is a deft servant, a devoted and loyal friend, a wise counsellor and a trusted recipient of all manner of confidences, which he never betrays. In novel after novel he appears as a compendium of all the virtues, so that one longs to move to England and hire a valet, if only to meet, in the flesh, such a perfect specimen of Christian manhood.

Now it develops that there is truth in this tradition. No English baronet would leave $100,000 to a valet if the valet was not just as described above. It is good to know that some of our gay fancies can be verified now and then.—El Dorado News.

Michael Angelo's Joke

PERHAPS the most noted piece of statuary in Florence, if not in all Italy, is that of David by Michael Angelo, according to "Successful Farming." It was made from a gi-gantic piece of marble that had been abandoned as worthless. It is said that when the statue of David was put in place one of the chief dignitaries expressed his admiration for the work and then offered a criticism that the nose was too large.
The great sculptor ascended a ladder with hammer and chisel and some marble dust. As he pretended to work he let some of the dust fall gradually. After spending some time he descended and asked the critic to take another good look at it searchingly he shouted, "Bravo! Well done! You have given it life!"—Fayetteville Daily Ledger

Farm Light Plant

ELECTRICITY on the average farm saves 58.1 days of work, a recent survey made in New York shows, according to J. P. Schaefer writing in the current issue of "Successful Farming."

In this survey, says Mr. Schaefer, 135 farmers reported that they saved 23.6 days of labor per year due to the use of good lights and electrically operated labor saving equipment.
One hundred and seventy-four households reported an average saving of 34.5 days per year. This is a total of 58.1 days saved on the average farm. From this 26.5 hours must be subtracted for care of the light plant. A Wisconsin survey also reported in "Successful Farming" showed that the use of flood lights on the farm in place of a kerosene lantern saves an hour a day in doing chores.

Daily WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON—It looks now as if the presidential year 1932 might really be the year for a realignment of political parties such as one has heard predicted for the last decade or two. Anyway, there is going to be a lot of talk about the possibility.

At this brief distance from the congressional elections, there appear to be the makings of a bolting year, which would make 1928 and 1932 look quite normal by comparison.

There are three important factors to be considered—the western dries and the progressive such as voted for the elder Senator

La Follette to the number of nearly 5,000,000 when he ran for president as an independent in 1924.

These are some of the things that seem to have been proved or indicated this year:

1. Wets are following the old habit of the dries in disregarding party lines at the ballot box.

2. The south is politically dry and the agricultural west is politically dry. But you can't bolt even a wet Democratic presidential ticket in the south and get away with your political life—witness what happened to Senator

Heflin in Alabama, Senator Simmons in North Carolina, and to Bishop Cannon's anti-Smith ticket in West Virginia. On the other hand, Senator Norris of Nebraska has shown that a western Republican can bolt his party in a presidential campaign to support a wet candidate and still be renominated and re-elected.

3. Independent voters and most of the independent or progressive leaders are thoroughly dissatisfied with President Hoover.

4. The dries will be in a bad way politically if they can't get one of their own to the White House. The chance any independent dry candidate would have is indicated by the previous votes given. Prohibition Party candidates and the insignificant showing of the insignificant showing of the insignificant showing of the insignificant showing of the insignificant showing of the insignificant showing of the insignificant showing of the insignificant showing of the insignificant showing of the insignificant showings just made by independent dry candidates in Illinois and

New York.

Wet-Dry Issue Certain

Put all these facts in the hat, mix them up and certain conclusions seem very logical.

Both parties will have to worry about the wet vote and the dry vote. Northern Democratic leaders are sure they can nominate

Governor Roosevelt of New York, hold their own wet vote and the southern dries and capture perhaps millions of Republican wet votes unless the Republicans themselves have nominated a wet.

The Republicans will have to worry both about their wets and dries and the independents. The western insurgents are generally dry, but they are primarily progressives. Dry Senator Norris hoped Hoover in 1928 and if Hoover is renominated one can easily imagine Senators Borah of Idaho, La Follette of Wisconsin,

Howell of Nebraska, Brookhart of Iowa and others bolting him in 1932.

They have so consistently fought him over all their pet issues that either Hoover would have to make large concessions or these progressives would have to stultify themselves in order to support him. This takes no account of the question whether Hoover will be considered dry or moderately moist by 1932.

Roosevelt Is Liberal

The millions of La Follette voters of 1924 couldn't stand

Cagle Learns a Lot
The other day, in the list of football scores, appeared this: "Tulsa, 14; Mississippi A. & M., 0." We looked through several newspapers trying to find out how it happened. But few papers, outside of Tulsa, carried a story of the game.

The team that came out on the field at that one is coached by a man whose name has been in the headlines for several years. Playing football he was an individual whose exploits in the Army backfield were read by every football follower in the United States. His name is Christian K. Cagle.

Philosophy
Cagle would be a grand spot to break forth with some philosophy about how feeling is fame, were it not that Cagle is learning a whole lot and learning it swiftly, as coach at Mississippi A. & M., and he is taking his licking in the right spirit.

"I admit that when I was playing, I was concerned almost wholly with backfield play," Chris told New Orleans news hounds the other day. "It seems there is a line, too."

Cagle made the admission with one of his friendly grins. He seems to be standing up pretty well under the reverses. Only 24 years old, he is in charge of a squad that consists of only fair material. He faces his job with no coaching experience. But he is game.

Remembering Booth
Cagle told the newspapermen that he was glad to note that his mates back at West Point had remembered Booth.

"Did you see what they did to Booth?" he asked. "You know last year we hadn't heard about Booth. After we scored 13 points in the game, we started to rest. They were in Booth and before we knew what was going on, he helped to score the three touchdowns that beat us."

You may remember that when Cagle was playing, usually two or three men of the team played against the backfield. He was instructed to "stop Cagle." He was a marked man in nearly every game. Often his experience was the same as Booth's in the game in which he was tossed so severely that they had to bring out the stretcher. Cagle can appreciate Booth's feelings in the matter.

Basketball Between Patmos-Columbus Here
The boys of the Columbus high school basketball team are to meet the team of the Patmos consolidated school at the Army in Hope, Wednesday night. There is to be a game, also, between the girl's basketball teams of Columbus and Spring Hill, on the same court. These are the first games of the season for these three schools. The first game starts at 7:30. The admission income will be used for athletic equipment of the participating schools.

Tanlac Made Her Well Then And Has Kept Her Well Ever Since

What she said in 1924

Mrs. John J. Higgins, of Jennings Ave., South San Antonio, Texas, wrote us in 1924:

A few years ago I returned from Mexico so weak that my life would be cut short. I could neither eat nor sleep in a natural way, and at times it seemed that heart palpitation and nerve exhaustion would take me away. My druggist told me to try Tanlac and after a few weeks I was a different woman - nerves strong, appetite good and digestion excellent.

What she said in 1930

On August 27, 1930 the same woman said:

It's too bad more sickly people don't take Tanlac. My health has been very good since I first took it in 1923 and I keep it that way by occasionally taking a bottle of Tanlac when my stomach gets a little out of order or I feel rundown. How it does drive out that weak tired feeling!

If you are nervous, rundown and can't sleep, if gas and pains in stomach and bowels cause misery, you need Tanlac. Just try a bottle. It must help you or your druggist will refund your money.

CHAPTER LX

A MAN in tall hat and dinner clothes jostled against Barney Shields and begged his pardon. Shields muttered a reply and strode on. He looked neither to left nor right, but shouldered through the crowd. Someone knocked his hat. Shields caught it just in time to keep it from falling.

The sickening realization that Cella was lost to him—lost utterly—blinded the young man. He did not know where he was going. He did not care.

Then he became aware that someone was shouting. It was his name they were calling: "Mr. Shields! Oh, Mr. Shields!"

Barney turned. A small man, looking very excited, was running toward him calling his name. The man dodged about a group and reappeared. It was Edward, the butler.

Too disturbed to find this performance strange, Shields waited. Edward was out of breath. "She's—she's over there!" he gasped. "She wants to see you!"

"She? Who do you mean?"

The electric spark of hope kindled and died instantly. Edward was gesticulating toward a figure half way down the deck. Shields was not sure that he saw the person Edward was pointing out but certainly it was not Cella. Cella was nowhere in sight.

"Who is it? What does she want me for?"

The butler was struggling to regain his lost breath and seemed incapable of replying but he urged Shields in the direction from which he had come. For an instant the young man hesitated. Then he followed.

They had gone 10 yards when Shields uttered a sharp exclamation. He brushed past an intervening group, broke into a run and halted before a woman in black.

"Mrs. Rogers!" he cried. "How did you get here?" He caught the woman in his arms, staring down at her.

Margaret Rogers' brown eyes were wide and terrified. "Oh, Barney, I was so afraid he couldn't find you! I came as quickly as I could. What has happened? Where's Cella? Oh, I must know—"

Barney's arms fell. "You came for Cella?" he asked.

"Of course. Where is she? All I know is that servant said something dreadful had happened and you and her father had come to this boat. Where is she?"

The young man's lips were set. "I'm afraid it's too late even for you to do anything now."

"Barney—?" The mother's voice was hysterical.

"Oh, she's here all right. She's up on the next deck with the good-for-nothing she's married. Her father tried to stop her but he couldn't do anything."

"Murdered! Cella's not—married!"

"I'll take you up if you want to see her."

"Oh, Barney, it can't be! Not Cella, my baby. Take me to her. Hurry, Barney!"

Gay farewell crowds were trooping back over the gangplank. Passageways were less congested. Mrs. Rogers and Shields emerged on the second deck. The first person they met was John Mitchell.

"Margaret!" the man choked out. "Where is she, John? Where's Cella?"

Mitchell made a jerking motion with his head. "Over there. And that scoundrel's with her! For God's sake, Margaret, try to stop her! She's throwing her life away!"

Margaret Rogers did not wait to listen. She hurried in the direction Mitchell had indicated.

Cella's pale face blurred in the mist which danced before her mother's eyes. With a low, involuntary cry Margaret ran forward.

"Cella!" she called. "Darling—oh, I've found you!"

The girl smiled about. Disbelief, then fear, crossed her face. One wild, appealing glance and she flung herself forward into her mother's arms.

"Oh!" she cried. "Mother! Mother! I thought you'd gone! The girl clung to the older woman. Her shoulders rose and fell with great sobbing.

Tod Rogers interrupted the reunion. "It's time for everyone except passengers to leave the ship," he said brusquely. "You'd better say goodbye now, Cella. They'll be pulling up the gangplank in a minute or two."

Cella turned. "But, Tod—it's my mother!"

Jordan bowed stiffly. "How do you do? As I was saying there's barely time to get on shore."

The girl raised frightened eyes first to Jordan and then to Margaret. She started to speak but Mrs. Rogers was quicker.

"Come!" she said. "The young man is right. We must go immediately."

Jordan caught Cella's arm. "You're not going!" he said angrily. "You're going to stay here!"

Margaret Rogers' eyes flashed fire. "Young man, my daughter is coming with me!"

"But she's not!"

Suddenly Cella flung her head up. "I will not stay!" she cried. "And you can't talk to me that way! Let me go!"

She pulled her arm free and ran toward the stairs. In the doorway she met Mitchell and Shields. "Oh, father!" Cella sobbed. "Let's go home!"

They descended quickly. As they reached the deck below the cry rang out once more: "All ashore who's going ashore!"

Edward, a frightened and pathetic figure, waited on the pier. He brightened as he saw the four continuing toward him. "Will you want the car now, sir," he asked Mitchell just as though there were in the Gramercy Park drawing-room.

Mitchell nodded. Cella still clung to her mother's arm and the three men followed down the length of the pier. They found Mitchell's limousine and got inside.

"WHAT I'd like to know," Mitchell said after they had ridden for a time in silence, "is how you got here, Margaret?"

"It's hardly clear in my own mind," the woman answered. "I arrived in Baltimore this afternoon and went to the apartment. Mrs. Schultz said you'd been trying to find me. I can't understand it. John! I wrote you a letter before I went to the sanitarium. Didn't you get it?"

"Sanitarium? What letter?"

"I sent you a note in a letter to Cella. I remember—it was before her birthday."

"I never got that letter." (Neither Mitchell nor Cella recalled the evening Evelyn Parsons had been left alone in the drawing room with Margaret's message.)

"What did you say about a sanitarium?"

"I've been there. The doctor told me I had to go and I'm feeling so much better. Really, it's wonderful!"

Cella looked up. "I knew something was the matter!" she said. "I knew you wouldn't go away unless you were sick!" She caught her mother's hand and held it!

"But I'm not sick any more, darling. I'm well! As soon as I talked to Mrs. Schultz I took the train. And when I reached the house the butler insisted I should go to that boat."

The curious suspended feeling which is the aftermath of emotion and excitement rested over the four as they stepped out of the car. Edward held open the door and the others entered the house.

Then Margaret took charge of the situation.

"Cella and I would like to be alone for a while," she said. "Will you leave us, please?"

Mitchell and Shields departed in the direction of the study. Margaret sat down on theavenport and drew the girl beside her.

"What is it that has happened?" she asked tenderly. "Tell mother."

It was some time before Cella could speak coherently. Then she launched into a recital of loneliness and desperation. Her mother had gone. Her father she believed had turned against her. Barney Shields no longer loved her. When Tod Jordan declared he would make her happy there seemed nothing else to do but marry him.

"But—" Margaret began, gripped in frozen fear.

"We were going to be married in Havana," Cella confided. "Tod wanted to go to a justice of peace this afternoon but I wouldn't do that. I said it had to be a real wedding in a church!"

"But, my darling, you don't really love this man?"

"No."

MARGARET gathered her daughter into her arms and held her tight.

"Then you must never, never think of marrying him!" she declared. "Oh, Cella, suppose I'd been too late! Listen, darling, and remember what I'm going to tell you—"

Margaret paused and then in a tense voice she began: "I married your father because I loved him. I was a school girl, an orphan, and three weeks after the day we first met we were married. His mother disapproved and John quarreled with her. The first two years of our married life were the happiest I have ever known. You were born and we got out of the habit of going about together. John worked hard, spending more and more time at the office. There were—trivial things, oh, I don't know!—that caused quarrels. I felt neglected and mistreated. Things grew worse until finally—"

Here Margaret's voice suddenly broke—"I did the most foolish and reckless thing a young wife could do. I left him!"

Cella was watching her mother wide-eyed.

"I went away," Margaret continued, "and he let me divorce him. There was no cause—only my foolish misjudgment! Love can't be toyed with, Cella. If you cast it aside it becomes a knife blade, turning, ever turning, in your heart. Time passed and I was lonely. I married Bob Rogers but the knife blade remained. Oh, my darling, I'm telling you all this so you must never make a hideous mistake! You must never marry without love, Cella, and you must never marry for anything else!"

"But, mother—if you still love father so—?"

"Fush! You are never to mention a word I have said."

There was a footstep in the room. Two pair of startled eyes glanced up into John Mitchell's face.

"Margaret," the man said uncertainly, "why didn't you let me know? There was pleading and adoration in the voice."

Margaret Rogers arose. "You heard?" she began.

"Everything. Oh, my dearest—" Mitchell's arms closed about Margaret's shoulders. For an instant she clung there, then raised her head. Their lips met and, at sight of the joyous radiance on those two faces Cella crept from the room.

She went out into the darkened hallway. A gleam of light beckoned from the library. Cella moved forward on tip-toe. A familiar pair of shoulders came in view.

The girl paused in the doorway. "Oh, Barney!" she called softly. Barney came.

McAlester, Okla.—"When just a girl, at home, I was in a run-down condition, had severe pains in my side, and would have to go to bed for a day or two at a time," writes Mrs. G. C. Worsham, 217 West Cherokee Street, this city. "My mother gave me Cardui. It built me up, and it was years before I had any more trouble."

"After I was married, I had an illness, after which I suffered a great deal with soreness in my sides and in the lower part of my body. The weight of my hand on my body would hurt me."

"I just could not stand on my feet any length of time. I fretted until I was a nervous wreck. I tried different remedies, but could not see any improvement."

"My mother reminded me of how much good Cardui had done me at home, and so I began taking it again. After my first bottle, I was better. I could tell it by the soreness being less. I kept on taking Cardui until the soreness was all gone. I felt well and strong."
